

The Jacobi Solver method first checks if the vector to be checked is suitable for solving, and if its not the system prints an error message. If it can, then the system starts solving the method using the Jacobi method, which involves a nested for loop, a while statement consisting of another nested for loop and finally an if statement ending with a return current.

